Maintaining the integrity of the scientific record: corrections and best practices at The Lancet group

▼ Ashley N Cooper, Jessica E Dwyer

Abstract ▲

A transparent corrections process is essential to assist in the maintenance of public confidence in scientific and medical research. In the era of preprints, fast-paced peer review, and early-access publication, errors and oversights from both authors and editors might be more common. The swift and open correction of the public record requires the participation of authors, journal editors, and publishers, and in this Viewpoint we share The Lancet group's best practices around errors and corrections.

Sex and Gender Equity in Research Course

advancing sex and gender considerations in research and academic publishing

We are delighted to announce a new course on the SAGER Guidelines which has been developed in a partnership of Elsevier Researcher Academy, EASE and GENDRO. The course has been specifically designed to give those who have not yet implemented the SAGER Guidelines in their research or journal – or who feel they would like additional training in this area – the information and recommendations to make research output more inclusive and rigorous.

Delivered via directed self-learning in the form of webinars, you can tackle the course in your own time. Our comprehensive course is designed to provide you with the knowledge and skills to implement the SAGER Guidelines in your research and publishing. By taking the SAGER course, you will learn about sex and gender reporting and how to implement these guidelines in preparing your research proposal and eventually your manuscript as an author, and in the editorial and peer review evaluation as a reviewer and editor. You will learn about the distinction between sex and gender, the development of the SAGER Guidelines, and their implementation in various disciplines and organizations. Additionally, we will walk you through the SAGER Guidelines structure, recommendations per section of the article, and the author/editor checklist.

By the end of the course, you will have a deeper understanding of the importance of sex and gender in research and be able to incorporate these considerations into your work.

For more information about the course, please click here.

At the bottom, there are logos for 'ease', 'GENDRO', and 'ELSEVIER Researcher Academy'. The main text is in a dark grey font.

Presentation: The role of journal editors in closing the gender gap

This presentation was given by Dr Joan Marsh, Editor-in-Chief of Lancet Psychiatry to the European Congress of Psychiatry in Paris in March 2023 in the symposium entitled "Academic psychiatry: is gender equality within reach?". Journal editors can promote gender equality in various ways. The main ones are consideration of gender when inviting editorial board members, peer reviewers, and authors of solicited opinion pieces or reviews. Joan presented a case study of the many ways in which The Lancet group of journals are tackling this issue.
